Supporting the learning and development of Scotland's social service workforce

What's has 'learning and development' got to do with me?

How do I meet post-registration requirements?

How can I find out more about workforce planning and development?

What is practice learning and how do I find out more?

Have you asked any of these questions? We're here to help provide answers...

The Scottish Social Services Learning Network is a new project designed to support the learning and development of staff working in Scotland's social services. The West Network works with all partner agencies and stakeholders from Argyll and Bute to Dumfries and Galloway.

We aim to:

- embed a culture of learning and continuing employee development in the social service workforce;
- support registration and post-registration needs of social service staff;
- increase the quality, quantity and diversity of practice learning; and
- achieve workforce planning and development.

Irrespective of your occupation or the sector in which you work – if you're involved in social service provision in South East Scotland we're here to support you!

How we can help:

The Network is your information and communications resource. We aim to help you keep abreast of learning opportunities, registration issues, developments in practice learning and workforce planning.

The Network is your facilitator. Our aim is to bring people and resources together to support effective practice. Participate in our programme of projects and events. Work with us to contribute to the development of innovative solutions that embed a culture of learning and continuing employee development in the social service workforce.
